Construction management is a procurement route in which the works are constructed by a number of different trade contractors. These trade contractors are contracted to the client but managed by a construction manager. The construction manager acts as an agent for the client, administering and co-ordinating the works contracts.

Procurement route - Designing Buildings Wiki

The traditional procurement route involves separating design from construction. The client first appoints consultants to design the project in detail and to ensure cost control and inspect the construction works as they proceed. Contractors are then invited to submit tenders for the construction of the project on a single-stage competitive basis.

Procurement practice is by necessity very diverse and depends on both the type of client – private or public – and the complexity of a project. For example, the government 's “ build, build, build ” programme relies on investment to deliver the levelling-up agenda and enables the public-sector infrastructure clients to provide their supply chain with the certainty of a large and secure pipeline.
