VEGETATED BUFFER ZONES AND NATURALIZATION. WHY: is it important to have ribbons of trees, shrubs and deep rooted smaller plants around all water bodies. Surface water bodies, such as Lake Scugog, its tributaries and streams, receive runoff water from farms or residential areas. Great amounts of phosphorus, nitrogen, silt, sediment, chemicals, heavy metals, salt, bacteria and much more, are abundant in this water runoff from land.

The bush generally refers to areas of vegetated wilderness that are not as remote as the outback is. So while a person living in Sydney may spend their weekend hiking (or bushwalking) in the bush that lies just outside the city, they wouldn't take a weekend to go wander around the outback. (There is, however, an uptick in what's called "outback tourism," so even the outback is getting closer and closer to the city.)

Although native deer browse Strawberry-bush with impunity, the leaves and twigs are considered to be deadly poisonous to domestic sheep and cattle. Strawberry-bushes often grow along shaded streams, in river bottoms, or in moist open woods across the eastern U.S. and into Texas, so the vegetated banks of Hilton Pond appear to be an ideal habitat. We're glad of that, and rather than driving off to the mountains to watch the leaves change color we'll stay home and spend the next month taking ...

The vegetated areas of the smallest continent are uniquely Australian. It's estimated almost a fifth of Australia is covered in dry forest. The dry forests, colloquially deemed "the bush", is concentrated mostly along the east coast, with small pockets in the southwest and northern extremities of the country. These are the kingdoms of the most common of Australian mammals, marsupials.
