The Muslim Discovery of Europe certainly demonstrates this, as he shows the political, social and economic mis-cues between Europe and the Near East over the last 1000 years. For much of that time, the rulers of the Middle East were not terribly interested in Europe (this may be suprising to Europeans), as socially and economically it was a backwater: the caliphs tended to look east.

The Muslim Discovery of Europe, by Bernard Lewis. 3.77 · Rating details · 252 ratings · 22 reviews. The eleventh-century Muslim world was a great civilization while Europe lay slumbering in the Dark Ages. Slowly, inevitably, Europe and Islam came together, through trade and war, crusade and diplomacy. The ebb and flow between these two worlds for seven hundred years, illuminated here by a brilliant historian, is one of the great sagas of world history.

But the relationship between Islam and Europe, whether in war or in peace, has always been a dialogue, not a monologue: the process of discovery was mutual. Muslim perceptions of the West are no less deserving of study than Western perceptions of Islam, and have received less attention'. To all disciples of Edward Said, I say 'Eat your hat'!

Discovery of the New World. In the Iberian Peninsula the impetus of the counteroffensive against the Moors carried the Portuguese to probe the West African coastline and the Spanish to attempt the expulsion of Islam from the western Mediterranean. In the last years of the 15th century, Portuguese navigators established the sea route to India and within a decade had secured control of the trade routes in the Indian Ocean and its approaches.

Lewis may have already supplied the answer to the question in the other title in his "The Muslim Discovery of Europe," first published in 1982. Lewis points out that in the early days of Islam there was a rule called "ifjihad," the exercise of independent judgment on issues that had not been discussed or answered in the Koran.

A part of Europe, mostly Western Europe, is undergoing Islamization and Arabization (well, even though it's Turkic people in Germany and Indo-Iranian ones in the U.K.). Another part of Europe considers the trend to be unacceptable and existentially important and will do almost everything it can to avoid this trend.
